Statements

Mission Statement

Camp Gordon Johnston's museum role is to preserve the heritage of the men who trained at the camp during WW II. Carrabelle was the focal point of social life around the camp when it was open during WW II, and today continues its role as the preserver of the amphibious soldier's heritage.

Camp Gordon Johnston opened in 1942 for the sole purpose of training amphibious soldiers and their support groups, this camp trained a quarter of a million men, closing in June of 1946.

The sacrifices and achievements of our WW II era citizens have led historians to label these individuals as the best generation America has yet produced. We feel it would be a tragedy not to display their accomplishments as a worthy lesson for today's citizens. To this extent the museum promotes not only the history of WW II, but also portrays the gigantic effort that our nation poured into this conflict. The CGJ Museum has compiled an extensive history of the various units that trained here, as well as a photographic display of the area and life as it existed at the camp. Furthermore, the CGJ veterans have contributed the artifacts brought back from battles overseas, along with uniforms, mess kits, and all sorts of souvenirs, too numerous to name.

Background Statement

Early in 1995 a group of North Florida people began speculating on the possibility of forming a Camp Gordon Johnston Association and holding reunions of men and women who served there. It was soon discovered that a whole lot of people were electrified by the idea, and we began holding regular meetings in Lanark Village or Carrabelle. Result: a smashing first reunion March 1-3, 1996 and a commitment to hold annual reunions each March for the foreseeable future. The reunions so far have been great fun and well-attended. They came to Camp Gordon Johnston from every state in the Union during World War II and they're coming from every state for the reunions, too.

CEO/Executive Director Statement

Our objective is three-fold:

To preserve the memories of the soldiers, sailors, airmen and all military personnel as well as civilians who were a part of Camp Carrabelle and Camp Gordon Johnston as well as the surrounding towns counties who were a part of the WWII history of the area. The museum is a unique microcosm of that era and is extremely important to the culture, education and history of that generation. The final caveat to our efforts is the tourist activity that we have generated for Franklin County.

Board Chair Statement

Our long term perspective is to keep the museum operating through grants and an endowment fund. By keeping the museum financially stable, we will be able to maintain facilities and a limited staff. By not becoming dependent upon the taxpayers our goal is to turn ownership over to either city, county or state ownership. The board of directors will continue to direct and operate the museum as a valuable asset contributing to history, education and tourism for northwest Florida
